On the other hand, the most heavily taxed people are the most highly civilized, whether it be a coincidence merely or a consequence of the taxation. It was a toble use for faxation in the education and elevation of humanity. The speaker showed that even though born poor in material things, the new born babe was the heir of all the area.

shifting About Now.

Dr. Alderman referred humorously to the time when the South was an agricultural people, and the North did all the manufacturing, showing how the raw product of the Southern farm was sent away for manufacture and brought back and sold at an immense advance in its new form, and contrasted conditions in that day with those of the present, when the South is beginning to do her own manufacturing to a large extent. The speaker stated that he had thought sometimes that Virginians were too proud, but when he saw her statues and reviewed the achievements of her great sons, he had concluded that their pride was justified. It would not do to depend upon the past, however glorious. Life is a constant fight, and the men and women of to-day have great duties, responsibilities, opportunities.

Digressing for a moment, the speaker referred to the "Recollections" of General Lee, by his som, and paid a handsonic tribute to him, mentioning, among other things, a letter the great soldier had written in 1889, stating that he was going to attend an educational meeting. Reverting again to the changed conditions in the South, the speaker drew a pleture of the towns along the railroads of the South years ago and now, showing the wonderful growth of industrialism, a life the South is now living. It is idle to talk of money in a contemptuous sense; no one thinks of it in this way. Money is only a form of power, and men should know how to use it right to make the productivity, Massachusetts was an example of this truth. To-day's Heroes.

Dr. Alderman paid a tribute to the men afty and sixty years old to-day and their splendid heroism, our civic heroes who came from the war and bravely and calmiy met the fitture and bore themselves like men in the new conditions. These men, he declared, are the cleancest, sharpest, clearest cut heroes in American life to-day. It must be a very small man who does not render to those men the homage of his soul. They have fought heroically the grim battle incident to a change of this striking culogy of the heroes of peace.

Dr. Alderman then enumerated the issues and purposes in the platform of the Co-operative Education Commission. First, we ought to have a mine-month school term for every child. It was wrong that the urban population should have an educational advantage of the country hoys:

"Second, we must have comfortable, attractive, clean sanitary school houses, and not make the school room a hard penitential place. None is too good for the children of Virginia, The many towns he had found that the two best buildings were the courthouse and the jail, and he has been almost tempted, sometimes, he said jocularly, to stop at the jail instead of the hotel.

It's a fundamental condition of the progress we seek, said the speaker, that we should offer greater remoneration for treachers. We want also expet supervision, and we need the rural and the traveling library. Good country roads were essential to better rural educational facilities, for no movement is so closely allied to education as that for good roads. For all these reforms we need more meney and we are going to get this when we arouse public sentiment and appeal for it. In order to get if there must be some sacrifice. The more more must be some sacrifice. The more more many the some sacrifice. The more more many the some sacrifice. The more more many the some sacrifice. men and women to enter into this movement.

In closing his address Dr. Alderman drew a striking picture of the parade of Confederate veterans at a reunion at New Orleans and described his thoughts, feelings and impressions as he looked upon that great gathering, noting the spiritual light in the eyes of the old soldiers. He offered an eloquent enlogy of those men and of their heroism, and appealed for the same spirit in the great struggle of to-dax.

Among those in the audience were: Major E. T. D. Myers, Judge B. T. Crump, John Rutherford, John G. Walker, Rev. Lee Traylor, W. W. Fox, James W. Gordon, S. H. Pulliam, J. T. Glassow, G. G.
